in ar in genera, character tot tat o. Cooraco. The Sherman rocky but break through the face—the area roots of the great mountain system which spreads on its branches to the northwest. Further west, in the neighborhood of Larame City, there is evidence of increase in all, and rich pasturage is abundant.

As evening rides began to gather, we were riding for Elk Mountain, about 75 miles away; and, having seen a trail was to be seen in the distance where, we awaited our view of such an occupation as offered. Fort-Craxon sat at a little table in the middle of the car, smoking calmly with fugitive memories of music, whilst the owner, of the London Graphic, transferred his attention to his sketch-book. A man, of the Natural World was, by the way, in the company, pursuing an extensive race in Cooraco, which earned a y of horses. "Tim Junker" grew enthusiastic about his culture. We are amused at into its favorite theme, the Fair, advising at Cooraco should set about the immediate establishment of "Butter factories, for the manufacture of a first-class article. The eyes were fixed upon, as he took, with intense satisfaction, how many bugs he had collected during his trip." Wells, of the Paranologist, discoursed of the probable characteristics of the future race of Cooraco, hazarding the opinion that it will be a race of people having more brains than a race of people, using a mild expression. Mean and one or two others of the plant collectors came to share views as to the exact place in the botanical calendar occupied by a certain little blue flower which they had seen on the journey: one thinking it was a delphinium; another thinking it was panicum. Williams, who led the tour, called the "love seed" to ensure some of those who had committed themselves to his care, that it was the thing, how well he could have the role of the "feathered Chinese. And so forth, until it was time for us to enter into our retreats.

JOHN ROBINSON'S CIRCUS.

Everybody went to the Circus, so that there is no need for us to say anything about it.

All the children in the Town and County had, of course, to be taken, and was curious to observe—as the Clown said—how many grown men and women were required to take charge of one small boy or girl. Fathers and mothers, Uncles and Aunts, big Brothers and Sisters, had to be a helping hand, and they did it with such readiness and good humor, that it seemed as though the duty were delight. There is nothing like a Circus and Menagerie for illustrating the truth of the saying that men are but children of a larger growth. The delicious aroma of the menagerie, the rustling and shouting and with-cracking of the ring, carry men back to the days of their youth with resistless power.

To many of our County people, John Robinson's Circus was the first such rejuvenator they had seen for ten or fifteen years, and their thoughts were taken back to the homes far, far away, and with which they longed, long ago. Some of the dwellers in Southern Cooraco, where we are told, have a course of hundred miles to taste once more the joys of youth, to see the show, and went back satisfied. Then, to some of our young people, it was the very first experience of airy-and; or, from the day of their birth, there had never before been a circus within reach; and they gazed with wonder on the strange animals and with undisguised delight on the performances in the arena.

The exhibition was first-class in its character. The menagerie contains some very rare specimens, seldom seen in traveling shows, and all the animals were in good condition and we cared for. The feats of horsemanship in the ring and the acrobatic and other performances, were very clever.

We understand that the total receipts at the ticket office were $4,286.50. This is a sign that, though money may be tight, it is not altogether lacking. Our store-keepers and Merchants did a large amount of business, as the circus attracted people from all parts of the county, and most of them avail themselves of the opportunity to do a little trading.

The whole of the show—performers, animals, wagons, carriages, tents, and the "fixures"—were transported over the Denver & Rio Grande Railway, occupying 51 cars. That the Narrow Gauge proved itself a most successful proposition in carrying powers is manifest from the following letter which was addressed by Mr. Robinson to Mr. Bors, the Superintendent, who gave his personal attention to the work of transportation:

DENVER, Colo, August 20th, 1875.

W. W. BORS, Esq.

Su't D. & R. G. Railway.

DEAR SIR:—I was with some doubts as to whether you or transportation for my Great World's Exposition, consisting of: Circus, Menagerie, and Aquarium, over your line; it having been intimated to me that great difficulty might be experienced in obtaining sufficient accommodations over the Narrow Gauge, and, even if these were obtained, it would be extremely precarious, as many of my cages and wild animals are very high. I have had several verbal expressions in transporting my circus, but, over railroad, and I feel free hereby to express to you my appreciation of your arrangements made for me, and to say that never has my World's Exposition been moved more promptly or satisfactorily, your cars being ample to accommodate my stock, wagons, cages, and even the essential weighing and stanching time for eight inches in weight. The stock and animals have never been on any line with as much ease and comfort as on your Narrow-Gauge road. Your cars being so near the ground, render them much easier to load than those of the ordinary gauge. I have met with courteous and attentive treatment from your employees and agents, and everything was a complete success.

Truly yours,

JOHN ROBINSON, Esq.

Manager of O. C. John Robinson's Great World's
